Thank you for your interest in the U.S. Air Force Aerial Events Support Program. This on-line capability was developed to provide active duty Air Force, Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard operators and unit schedulers a near real-time capability to check which public events have been determined eligible by Air Force Public Affairs at the Pentagon, as well as those approved at the major command level, for potential operational support. The site also provides complete request procedures for military and non-military requestors, and is the single location to determine if a public event has been deemed eligible for support. An event eligible for support may not necessarily be supported, as flying units must carefully balance their real-world operations and training requirements with public affairs aviation event requests.

STEP 1: Go to USAF Aerial Events Web site, click NEW REQUEST (DD2535 form)

SEYMOUR JOHNSON AIR FORCE BASE, N.C. – Children have wonderful imaginations which can sometimes go into overdrive when they do not understand the things happening around them.

To show children first hand some of the things their parents go through as they prepare to deploy and prevent their imaginations from running away on them, the Airman & Family Readiness Center is hosting Operations Bug Out.

The free event open to children ages 5-15 takes place from 8 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. April 30 and begins at the Youth Center.

After taking the oath of enlistment participants will receive their uniform of the day, an Operation Bug Out t-shirt, and dog tags before leaving to process through the personnel deployment function line. On the PDF line children spend time with medical personnel, fire fighters, explosive ordinance technicians and other professionals before receiving an aircraft tour.

With deployment tempo changing the A&FRC staff felt the need to do something to help children understand what their parents go through when deploying, said Marilyn McCallum Roseborough, A&FRC chief.
